

Annie Holmes

Former Executive Director, Diversity and Inclusivity
California Polytechnic State University – San Luis Obispo

One thing that is absolutely essential is that we all self-reflect and own the value of our own diversity and the privilege we possess. It is through this process that we can approach the work through authentic and genuine ways. I truly believe that the reason so many people are uncomfortable with difference is because they are not comfortable with who they are. Being “pro me” is not “anti you”.

Learn about the legacy that made you. Discover how you love. Explore your own values.

Being comfortable with me allows me to be more open to who you are. Diversity does not take away from others. Once people realize who they are and the value that brings to the table, we can stop fixating on trying to get others to assimilate and become “normal”. The beauty of diversity is exploring a goal from different vantage points; that is where innovation is conceived.