My story is about building bridges. Forty-six years ago, my best friend Bridget and I started a multi-racial group of fellow Catholic high school students called "Project Awareness" following the death of Dr. Martin Luther King. The late 60s were turbulent across the country and in Indianapolis. We wanted to share our racial stories with predominantly white Catholic grade school students, who had no sense of racial diversity — some of whom had never met a black person before. How incredible/sad/ever hopeful that we are still doing this today. We dream...we build bridges... we hope.
