The older I get, the more convinced I am that life is like an intricate puzzle that never gets finished, and like a beautiful building that spends most of its time in the architectural and construction phase. In my younger years, I was convinced that my journey in life should be like a clear, well-thought-out plan with no deviations. Today, my life's journey is much less thought out and planned. I have come to learn that the true blessings and beauty of the experiences I have had in my life have come from the unplanned, scenic routes I have taken. So, is my life different than what I imagined? I am pleased to say, with a resounding yes that it is, and I feel much wiser, more joyful and very blessed because of it.
