I've never allowed being a "gay" woman of color to define me. These are merely aspects of the total me. However, these dimensions have heightened my sense of awareness and desire to truly see each and every person I meet, through eye contact, a smile, and through authentic conversation. I feel compelled to let people know they are not invisible, and that in the smallest and grandest ways they are special and beautiful and wonderful and should hold their head up high and walk tall and proud in their humanity.
